“We are constantly working hard to make sure that FIFA delivers the best football experience and ultimately brings the players to life like never before,” said David Rutter, Senior Creative Director at EA Sports. “Thanks to the incredible work of our incredible teams, in this year’s FIFA game, our player development and physics teams have delivered an unprecedented level of likeness, authenticity and polish – not to mention faster gameplay, a huge increase in visual quality and an even more complete roster of players.” “Our goal is to make FIFA the best football game, and as we continue to evolve, we find innovative ways to make sure that we’re not only delivering the best football experience but also one that is best in the world,” said Andrew Wilson, Senior Producer, FIFA. “In FIFA 22 we’ve taken advantage of the continued development of the Unity engine to deliver even better visuals, even better player intelligence and abilities, and even more authentic player movements, physics and behaviours. From an engine technology perspective we’ve also introduced our first use of Motion Capture technology which allowed us to capture more than 22 players at the same time and use their movements to create a more authentic gameplay experience.” In FIFA 22, the best player development team in the history of the series, including its newly launched FIFA Street Academy, continues to push the boundaries of player development using the latest techniques and technologies. These innovations include: An unparalleled squad of 250 players Infinitely scalable player detail through unique Player Traits and Recreated player data A FIFA gameplay engine that goes beyond physics and includes a complete suite of gameplay mechanisms A new all-new ball physics system that allows the ball to behave like a controlled projectile, capable of capturing the flight of the ball and releasing it with explosive force when heading a goal Simultaneous multiplayer gameplay and connections to the gaming community The Road to the FIFA Championship Series In FIFA 22, the pursuit of a dream of global football supremacy will be joined with a new six-part qualification series to give you the opportunity to compete for FIFA Ultimate Team cards.
