A leading concussion expert has complained in the Australian Federal Court that current injuries in Australian football are being ignored. The expert has lodged an application under the Federal Court's sport code to declare modern football a danger to players. Brian Wright, a sports concussions researcher at Monash University, said the case was being handled by a sports concussions organisation, Lawyer and the Court which is looking to appoint an independent expert on the issue as a "human interest" claim. "It's very high profile and not something that's just been handed to me," Mr Wright said. "They're looking for the world's leading expert in this area, so it's an opportunity I've certainly looked forward to." The application marks a "game changer" in the law, arguing that football, like many other sports, was an emerging new sport or tradition. Mr Wright's application will ask the court to declare that to assume that football is a sport does not rest on a reasonable basis. It argues that the vast majority of football players who suffer injuries are also doing so in the name of enjoying their sport. Mr Wright said on Monday it was not about declaring football a "sport" but rather making sure a protocol for the prevention of head injuries was in place. "There's basically a lot of suffering going on and probably an equal amount of suffering not being adequately dealt with," he said. "Our society thinks that

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a network system that connects multiple devices, and a device controller and a device communicator that control communication in the network system. The invention also relates to a computer system and a device controller and a device communicator that control communication in the network system. 2. Description of the Related Art A system in which multiple nodes are connected in a network with each having a processor and a memory has already been proposed. An example of such a system is a system in which multiple nodes are connected to a network and each node has a processor and a memory. In such a system, when the network is disconnected or one node in the system is brought down (replaced), it is necessary to restart the node. For example, in the system in which multiple nodes are connected to a network and each node has a processor and a memory, when the network is disconnected or one node is brought down, when the network is restored or a new node is connected, and when a memory is to be provided in a node, it is necessary to restart the node. To perform a restart in the system, since a processor and a memory are made in one chip, it is necessary to reset the chip. Since a different clock frequency is set for each module included in
