OPUS: The Day We Found Earth is a space opera computer animated web series animated by Christian Becker and Tim Miller in collaboration with Amblin Television. It combines elements of science fiction, animation, and circus. The series follows a group of clowns and animatronics as they search for their missing masters after a meteor from outer space collides with Earth, knocking the clowns, robot animatronics, and humans into 30,000 years in the past. In 2019, a 6-episode TV series was picked up by History, with animation production by Jungaroo. A feature-length film is currently in development. Synopsis The series begins with the collision of a meteor with Earth, resulting in the time-jump to 30,000 years in the past. When the meteor is discovered by a crow, he races to alert the clowns, inventors, cabaret stars, and the rest of the world. The meteor strikes the Earth's moon and turns its surface into a solid piece of metal. The humans of today are the descendants of survivors who are spared from the cataclysm by wearing special helmets. When the meteor strikes, the human pilot of the UFO observes the catastrophic events, and she bails out before the ship crashes into the Earth's atmosphere. She is captured by the extraterrestrials, whose race yearns to learn human technology. They place her within a dome to prolong her life, but after five hundred years her body is deteriorating. The dome is also used for experiments, and one of the captive humans is placed within a large metallic coffin called a Bubble. Once the humans find their way back to Earth, a United States Marine secretly creates a machine that can control bugs and hookworms, for this device will be required as humans migrate out of the Dome. Their new home, the Dome City, is divided into three artificial continents: Golden, Silver, and Bronze Age. In Golden Age, the human chemical inventor develops drugs that bring life to the Bubbles. But the alien scientist has created a substance that will kill Bubbles. The clowns rescue their colleagues, and in Bronze Age they try to make the clowns more cartoonish, in order to appeal to children, while they seek a way to kill the Bubbles. Meanwhile, in the Golden Age City, several clones of the human who created the Bubbles are manufacturing the chemicals, and placing them in the Bubbles.

In Silver Age, they bring a bottle of the antidote

   I have get some runs and this error I get lots of runs like this one: Does any body know how I can fix this problem? I use W10 if this matters. I want to do this because I know who finally made this game. A: Although this is not a script error, as it relates to the game It is not possible as the end game will not be the same for all gamers. Windows is at the mercy of the game developer to not file every piece of data during the installation and usage of a computer game. This can differ in degree but there is no way to determine every permutation of events once the game exists in the public domain. Windows in the case of the top two games are being forced to store conditions that are supposed to be (can be) vital to the successful installation of a game. For example, no pops or freezeups is being done and despite the existence of both issues that wxsmith is encountering with the installation of Animation Pack both wxmax and Animation Pack are installed on a fresh hard disk and lead to the same result in both scenarios, after the game is initially attempted to install the boot program. This can vary. Without the proper data store of program/game related data some pop/lockup/freezeup would never occur. Attempting to script this installation is futile as there are other problems that may arise while the application or game is running on the computer requiring input such as inputs from text entry boxes or scripts to deal with the presence or absence of the hardware scanner or external device such as a usb cable. The best way to proceed, and this has been stated, is to use the provided install package or the install script published by the maker of the game. Use the tools provided by the maker of the game and follow the instructions provided as can be found in the readme in the archives or located on the web. Other general pitfalls can occur that will force Windows to stop the application such as resetting the clock during a game, user actions such as
