Immunohistochemical localization of proteoglycans in the bladder smooth muscle of the mouse. The immunohistochemical localization of proteoglycans in the bladder smooth muscle of the mouse was studied at the light microscopic level. Porcine chondroitin 4- and 6-sulfate antisera stained bladder wall sections while a rat hyaluronic acid (HA) antiserum labelled the subepithelial stroma and the space between smooth muscle bundles. Porcine chondroitin 6-sulfate antiserum labelled the perineurium, perivascular and perisynaptic connective tissue and the space between muscle bundles. Similarly, rat HA antiserum labelled the subepithelial stroma and the space between muscle bundles. Two antisera of unknown specificity (AS-1 and AS-2) stained the stroma of the muscle layer, as well as the space between muscle bundles. AS-1 marked the collagenous stroma of the muscle bundles and the perineurium, whereas AS-2 labelled the perineurium and the perivascular connective tissue. These results suggest that chondroitin sulfate proteoglycans (PGs) and hyaluronic acid PGs are distributed mainly in the connective tissue surrounding muscle bundles and the space between them while the subepithelial stroma of the muscle layer may be mainly negative for glycosaminoglycans.
